Units of study in detail:

Unit 1: Marriage, Home, and the Family: [Supports Course SLOs #1-6]

- Examine the social and historical circumstances in which these women were writing.
- Examine the ways in which marriage and the family are structured along patriarchal lines, and what are the opportunities for resistance, rebellion, and reforming these structures in ways appropriate to women's lived experience.
- Here and throughout the semester we will be examining the ways in which gender is a social construct, looking at how social norms and expectations construct women's identities and behaviors both in and outside the home.
• Topics covered include the coinage of the word homosexual, the pansy crazy, and WWII.

Unit 2: Heterosexual Female Desire [Supports Course SLOs #1-6]
• Whereas Unit One focused specifically on marriage, this unit shifts attention to different expressions of female sexual desire and the ways in which this desire can be seen as a form of rebellion against patriarchal norms and structures.
• Study Eliza Haywood's Fantomina, Marguerite Duras' The Lover, and Jean Rhys's Good Morning, Midnight, for examples, analyzing the ways in which the women in these novels claim agency over their own sexual experience, and how that agency conflicts with the norms of their society at the time these authors were writing.

Unit 3: Queer Female Desire [Supports Course SLOs #1-6]
• Examine the readings for this unit are about transgender and queer female sexuality.
• Explore readings, such as Aphra Behn's "To the Fair Clarinda, Who Made Love to Me, Imagined More than Woman," Christina Rossetti's "Goblin Market," and Radclyffe Hall's "Miss Oglivy Finds Herself," that challenge conventional notions of heteronormativity, and illuminate ways in which sexuality, like gender, is a social construct.
• Compare how the characters in one reading or novel navigates her queer sexuality differently from the women discussed in other texts, and as whole.

Unit 4: The Intersection of Race, Gender, and Sexuality: [Supports Course SLOs #1-6]
• Combine what has been learned about gender and sexuality with how race and ethnicity influence expectations of Black and Indigenous women, and how women of color have different marriage, the home, and family experiences than white women.
• Explore how race and ethnicity, like sexuality and gender, are social constructs. Reading and analyzing Harriet Jacobs' Incidents in the Life of a Slave Girl, Louise Erdrich's "The Shawl," Maxine Hong Kingston's "No Name Woman," and Rita Dove's "I have been a stranger in a strange land," for examples, will enable learning more about how women of color experience themselves and others in a world predicated on white patriarchal privilege, and the ways in which women can rebel against and resist cultural norms and expectations.

Evaluation of student learning:

Achievement of the course objectives will be evaluated by the following tools. The methods of evaluation and the weighted percentage of these means of assessing student learning will vary among different instructors, but the greatest emphasis should be on formal written work.

Quizzes, attendance, participation (30%): Actively participating in discussion, quizzes, group workshops, attendance, and draft workshops.

Essays, Examinations (55%) Students will submit a total of 15 pages of peer-reviewed, final draft essay, split into individual essays; the total may include an essay final examination. Research essays should demonstrate careful text-based analysis, use of an appropriate critical lens, location of the text within a social and historical context, analysis of the characters or speakers in a variety of socially-defined categories, and integration of scholarly sources.

Presentation/Performance/Discussion-Leading (15%). Students work individually, in pairs, or a group to present creatively an aspect of a work and then lead class discussion for the day with open-ended questions.
